1. Determining their National Interest: Australia's Economic Intervention in Iraq, Chris Doran, AidWatch, July 2007 [PDF] This is the story of Australian interference, as an occupying power, in the Iraqi economy and its political institutions, interference that has advanced Australian commercial interests against the interests of the Iraqi people. It offers a systematic investigation into how the Australian government pursued narrow economic and trade interests in Iraq, frequently under the guise of humanitarian assistance.

2. Troops Could Leave Iraq 'Within a Year', AP, SMH, 2007-08-15 It would take 9 to 12 months to withdraw all US troops and contractors safely from Iraq and phase out US bases, an Anthony Cordesman of the Centre for Strategic and International Studies said. The US military in Iraq would prefer a somewhat slower-paced pullout over two years, while other experts "indicate it would be feasible" to pull out 10,000 troops and 10,000 contractors a month.

6. India Nukes Deal, Now for Russia, Sarah Smiles, Katharine Murphy and Anne Davies, Age, 2007-08-17 Prime Minister John Howard announced the sale of uranium to India under "strict conditions". At the same time, Government officials confirmed that a new agreement to sell uranium to Russia could be signed next month during the visit of President Vladimir Putin to Australia. The deal will pave the way for Australian uranium to fuel Russian reactors for the first time.

10. Tonga-Australia Sign Performance Partnership, Tonga Now, 2007-08-16 Australia and Tonga signed a Performance Partnership to assist the Government of Tonga in implementing its program of essential economic and public sector reforms. The partnership is the first in a series of new Performance Incentives arrangements announced in the 2007-08 overseas aid budget.
