1. Afghanistan and Iraq: Quagmire or Strategic Priority? Hugh White, Neil James, Richard Tanter, ABC, 2007-10-28 Australian troops are on active duty in many parts of the world including Iraq,

Afghanistan and even the Northern Territory, providing support to the federal government's intervention in indigenous affairs. The government and the opposition have committed themselves to increasing future defence budgets. In fact, there is little difference between their defence policies. What does that mean for Australia's future in overseas operations?

 3. Diggers Say No to Allies' Plan, Tom Hyland, Age, 2007-10-28 Australian troops, fearing widespread civilian casualties, refused to take part in a Dutch-led assault on advancing Taliban militia - a battle that left dozens of innocent Afghans dead. After the battle, the ADF issued two statements stressing Australian troops were not involved in the fighting. Defence Minister Brendan Nelson and senior military officers expressed careful concern about civilian casualties in the battle.

 5. Undiagnosed Brain Injury - The Hidden Legacy of Iraq, Matthew Taylor, Esther Addley, Guardian, 2007-10-27 The Ministry of Defence is conducting a major study into brain injury in troops returning from Iraq and Afghanistan amid fears that thousands of soldiers may have suffered damage after being exposed to high-velocity explosions. The condition, 'mild traumatic brain injury (mTBI)', has been designated as one of four 'signature injuries' of the Iraq conflict by the US department of defence.

 7. Dispute Flares over Nuclear Dump Site, Lindsay Murdoch, Age, 2007-10-29 Aboriginal owners of land surrounding the proposed site of Australia's first national nuclear dump have changed their minds about allowing trucks carrying waste to enter, as bitter argument rages among indigenous groups in the area about the Federal Government's plans.
 8. Making Modernity in Timor-Leste, Damian Grenfell, Arena, August-September 2007 [130 kb, PDF] When analysis draws in a comprehension of the ways in which the tribal-traditional systems play an important regulatory role in Timor-Leste, it becomes possible to understand other social processes - such as urban drift - in terms of their political consequences.
 9. Delivering Today and Building our Capabilities for the Future, Australian Customs Service Annual Report 2006-2007 In the 2006 Budget measures were added to tackle the threat posed by illegal foreign fishing in Australia's northern waters, including: enhancements to detection and apprehension capacity and work with Indonesian authorities in fishing communities in Indonesia. The results included sightings of motorised foreign fishing vessels in high risk areas down by 58 per cent over those in 2006.
 10. Austral Policy Forum 07-20A - The Re-emergence of an Australian Nuclear Weapons Option? - Richard Tanter Richard Tanter of the Nautilus Institute at RMIT writes that "the first public crack in Australian political elite repudiation of nuclear weapons since the Canberra Commission, if not the signing of the NPT itself, has come from a surprising source: a former advisor to Gareth Evans and a disarmament policy specialist in the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade." Tanter notes that "after a brief, apparently tough-minded tour of the bleak nuclear proliferation policy horizon, [Martine] Letts concluded a review of post-election security policy options with a call for a Rudd government to consider the strategic circumstances under which an Australian government should 'revisit the nuclear weapons option'." In the light of Australia's almost two decades of secret pursuit of nuclear weapons until 1972, and the understandable residual Indonesian suspicion about Australia's real nuclear intentions, it would be hard to imagine a policy recommendation with greater risk of contributing to the strategic circumstances it seeks to avoid.Read the full essay.
