1. DPRK-US Relations

The Chosun Ilbo ("U.S. SEEKS ACCESS TO EVANGELICAL ACTIVIST IN N.KOREA", 2010/01/21) reported that the U.S. government is pushing for access to an ethnic Korean evangelical activist who has been detained in DPRK since he walked across the border in a daredevil stunt to draw attention to human rights abuses there. The U.S. is hoping to make contact through the Swedish Embassy in Pyongyang, Radio Free Asia reported Tuesday. A senior State Department official told RFA that Washington has "demanded the consular access through them [Swedish Embassy] but DPRK has not granted it yet."

2. ROK on Six-Party Talks

Reuters ("SOUTH WANTS NORTH KOREA BACK AT NUCLEAR TALKS MID-FEBRUARY", Seoul, 2010/01/22) reported that ROK Foreign Minister Yu Myung-hwan said on Friday he wants to see the six-party talks resume in February without the DPRK attaching conditions to its return. "I expect that the six-party talks would resume around the time of Lunar New Year ," Foreign Minister Yu Myung-hwan told a news briefing. "I'm talking from the context that there is consensus between South Korea and China and between South Korea and Japan and with Russia. North Korea can probably feel it," Yu said.

3. DPRK Human Rights

The Dong-A Ilbo ("GOV`T PANEL REJECTS 3 REQUESTS ON NK HUMAN RIGHTS", 2010/01/21) reported that the National Human Rights Commission of ROK has turned down three appeals to improve DPRK human rights for the first time since the appointment of the body's chairman, Hyun Byung-chul, and ignored investigation requests for and recommendations on human rights in the communist country. In response, the commission said, "We rejected the cases in consideration of legal and actual limitations, including (an impossible) probe of the DPRK government," adding, "We will, however, positively consider in the future requests for the commission to actively express its opinion about human rights issues in DPRK."

4. ROK Aid to the DPRK

The Chosun Ilbo ("FOOD AID TO N.KOREA CLEARED FOR SHIPMENT", 2010/01/21) reported that the government completed the necessary administrative work Tuesday for the shipment of 10,000 tons of corn to DPRK, the Unification Ministry said Wednesday. The government plans to purchase Chinese corn with some W4 billion (US$1=W1,138) out of the inter-Korean development fund. The delivery is expected to take about a month. Seoul offered the corn aid in October last year, and Pyongyang accepted last Friday.

5. Inter-Korea Relations

Daily NK (Yang Jung A, "SOUTH KOREA MUST PAY FOR OVERTHROW PLAN", 2010/01/21) reported that in an article titled, "ROK will pay a high price," which was released by DPRK website "Uriminzokkiri" (being amongst our nation) on January 20, DPRK argues, "The ROK authorities' scheme to overthrow the system of our Republic has entered an explicit stage. The evidence for this fact is that the ROK authorities have released an overtly provocative scenario for overthrowing our Republic's system in the form of 'Contingency Plan-Revival.'" It continues, "If the ROK authorities retreat from the desire of the people for unification, they will have to pay a high price, and they should also understand that they will be defeated. The people of DPRK, ROK, and foreign countries need to firmly crush such anti-national behavior by the ruling ROK conservative party."

The Chosun Ilbo ("N.KOREA 'WANTS A SUMMIT BY HOOK OR BY CROOK'", 2010/01/21) reported that DPRK's mixed messages in recent day are geared to bullying and wheedling ROK into a summit, according to Hwang Jang-yop, an exiled former secretary of the DPRK Workers' Party. According to Daily North Korea, Hwang told students in a lecture in Seoul that the reason DPRK wants a summit so badly is that it hopes "to induce ROK into cooperating with its policies, get South Koreans to relax and encourage the Left" as it did in the days of the Kim Dae-jung administration.

The decision marks ROK's aspirations to indigenously develop such aircraft, instead of mostly relying on imports as it has done so far.
