1. US on DPRK Nuclear Program

Yonhap ("CLINTON CALLS FOR NORTH TO TAKE PLUNGE", Seoul, 2009/11/23) reported that U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton on Friday called on the DPRK to come back to the six-party talks. "We are going to go with a very clear message that there are significant benefits to North Korea if they recommit to the verifiable, irreversible denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula," Clinton said in an interview with Bloomberg Radio. Clinton said the U.S. "would explore some of the issues which they have raised continually with us over the years; namely, normalization of relations, a peace treaty instead of an armistice, economic development assistance." "All of that would be open for discussion," she said. "But the North Koreans have to commit to denuclearization. And we also think it's important to do so within the context of the six-party talks."

Yonhap ("N.K. SAYS NAVAL SKIRMISH DEMONSTRATES NEED FOR PEACE TREATY WITH U.S.", Seoul, 2009/11/23) reported that the DPRK urged the United States on Monday to replace their armistice agreement with a peace treaty. "In order to secure permanent peace and stability and end confrontation and clashes on the Korean Peninsula, the armistice between North Korea and the U.S. should be ended and a peace regime implemented," the Rodong Sinmun said in a commentary. "The recent armed clash highlights the pressing need (for a peace treaty)," the paper said.

According to the report, the DPRK also suggested having an on-site investigation into the fatal shooting of an ROK tourist there last year. ROK Unification Ministry said spokesman Chun Hae-sung said he hadn't been aware of Ri's comments before he read media reports and that the ministry had not been briefed by Hyundai. "There may have been some discussions at a working-level regarding the inter-Korean talks, but we can't acknowledge such exchanges as being official," Chun said.

Kumgang, citing the absurd three conditions."
