1. Inter-Korean Economic Talks

JoongAng Ilbo ("AID LINKAGE TO RAIL TESTS CONTINUES TO STALL TALKS", 2006-06-05) reported that on the third day of inter-Korean economic talks here, Pyongyang's delegation cancelled plans for a sightseeing excursion around the island to continue the negotiations. Pyongyang's delegation dwelled at length in the talks on Seoul's earlier promise to supply the DPRK with a package of materials aid for the DPRK's shoe, soap and textile industries worth tens of millions of dollars. The delegates from Seoul reminded their guests that the aid package had been made conditional on progress in reconnecting rail links between the two countries, especially on the completion of test runs of cross-border trains.

\(return to top\) Korea Times ("SEOUL URGES NK TO IMPLEMENT TRAIN TEST RUNS", 2006-0-05) reported that the ROK and DPRK failed to reach an agreement at the end of the four-day economic cooperation talks here, as the delegates from Pyongyang did not bow to Seoul's pressure on the test-run of cross-border trains while calling for the implementation of a deal on bilateral economic exchanges. 2. Rumsfeld on DPRK

JoongAng Ilbo ("RUMSFELD TO NORTH: FOLLOW LIBYA ", 2006-06-05) reported that the US defense secretary, Donald Rumsfeld, urged the DPRK to follow the "Libyan example" in a speech on Saturday at the annual Shangri-La Dialogue defense forum in Singapore. The future of the Pacific Rim, said Mr. Rumsfeld, will depend on the path the DPRK takes ? whether it continues to repress its people and threaten its neighbors, or follows Libya's example that "leads back to membership in the community of nations."

3. US Senator on DPRK Nuclear Capacity

Yonhap ("BIDEN SAYS N.K. INCREASED NUCLEAR CAPACITY 400 PERCENT SINCE 2002", 2006-06-04) reported that the DPRK has boosted its nuclear arsenal by 400 percent during the four years the Bush administration tried an isolation policy against its regime, a US senator said Sunday. Joseph Biden (D-Delaware), appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press," argued the policy clearly didn't work.

4. DPRK Naval Power

JoongAng Ilbo ("UK GROUP SAYS NORTH STRESSES SUBMARINE WARFARE", 2006-06-05) reported that the DPRK's submarine warfare capacity has increased dramatically and the number of its troops under arms has been reduced, according to a report by the International Institute for Strategic Studies. The institute is based in Britain, and released a report last weekend called "Military Balance 2006," an examination of the military capacity of 118 nations. The institute said the changes in the DPRK's military machine suggested that Pyongyang was focusing on doing the maximum possible damage to the infrastructure of the ROK in case of war rather than maintaining a large coterie of underequipped ground troops.

5. DPRK Troop Standards

JoongAng Ilbo ("4-FOOT-10 AND 95 POUNDS? KIM JONG-IL WANTS YOU", 2006-06-05) reported that the DPRK has loosened its fitness standards for soldiers to keep up its troop strength, according to data released by the National Intelligence Service. The service, in a report prepared for Representative Song Young-sun of the Grand National Party, said that Pyongyang changed its draft exemption standards in the mid-1990s, lowering the minimum height to be drafted from 150 centimeters (4 feet, 11 inches) to 148 centimeters and the minimum weight from 48 kilograms (106 pounds) to 43 kilograms.

Quoting a National Intelligence Service (NIS) report, Song Young-sun of the main opposition Grand National Party (GNP) also said 489 RO Koreans had been abducted by the DPRK. In its latest newsletter, the group called Good Friends and based in the ROK, says the accident on April 23 in the DPRK's Hamgyeong Province was a head-on collision between a passenger train and a freight train. 10. DPRK on US Korean War Policy

Reuters ("N.KOREA REPROACHES U.S. OVER WAR KILLINGS", 2006-06-05) reported that the DPRK criticized the US on Sunday over the mass killing of RO Korean refugees during the Korean War and demanded that US troops withdraw from the ROK. The comments come after the revelation of a 1950 letter from the US ambassador to Seoul, informing the State Department that US soldiers would shoot refugees approaching their lines. The letter, dated the day of the US Army's mass killing of refugees at the ROK village of No Gun Ri during the 1950-53 Korean War, is the strongest indication yet that such a policy existed for all US forces in Korea.

19. PRC Economic Disparity

Washington Post ("NATIVES FEEL LEFT OUT OF CHINA'S NEW WEST", 2006-06-05) reported that in the six years since the PRC's central government began its well-financed campaign to spread the benefits of economic growth beyond coastal provinces, the effort has exacerbated the extreme inequality that characterizes the national economy. 22. Report #251

CanKor ("CURRENT EVENTS", 2006-06-05) The White House rejects Pyongyang's invitation for the chief US envoy to the nuclear talks to visit the DPRK. The Korean Peninsula Energy Development Organization (KEDO), whose activities have been suspended since November 2003, officially folds. CanKor presents a chronology of KEDO history. Last March, DPRK experts met at the University of Toronto in Ontario, Canada for a conference on the internationalized aspects of DPRK human and environmental security. Kathleen Stephens, senior US assistant secretary of State for East Asian Affairs visits the inter-Korean Kaesong Industrial zone and is impressed by its "vision and scope" but warns that the project's goals are unlikely to be realized until the nuclear impasse is addressed. Jay Lefkowitz, US special envoy on North Korean human rights, agrees to visit Kaesong if and when Pyongyang issues permits for the visit. US Ambassador Alexander Vershbow is expected to travel with him. Officials in Pyongyang ask the ROK government for cooperation in receiving television broadcasts from World Cup games in Germany. This marks the first request from the DPRK for live broadcasts. Only previously recorded outside sporting events have been broadcast through the state-run North Korean Chosun Central TV in the past.
