1. US on DPRK Counterfeiting

China Daily ("NORTH KOREA HINTS AT CURBING MONEY LAUNDERING", 2006-01-26) reported that the DPRK has hinted it might observe international standards on money laundering but Washington wants action, Assistant Secretary of State Christopher Hill said on Wednesday. In a Reuters interview, Hill, who heads the US delegation to six talks said the hint came when he met in Beijing last week with DPR Korean counterpart Kim Kye-gwan and PRC officials in an effort to restart the stalled negotiations.

\(return to top\) Chosun Ilbo ("HILL SEES RAY OF HOPE IN N.KOREA STANDOFF ", 2006-01-26) reported that the US chief delegate at stalled six party talks held out some hope that the negotiations could resume soon despite tough talk from Washington and Pyongyang. Christopher Hill said his DPRK counterpart Kim Kye-gwan at a meeting in Beijing last week "indicated they would be prepared to subscribe to international norms with respect to money laundering and would want to cooperate internationally on these issues." But Hill told Reuters his government was "not looking here for words. We're more interested in actions. We'd like to see this (illicit) activity cease." Hill said he "made very clear that financial measures -- what we'd call defensive measures -- are quite separate from the issue of the six-party talks, and the way to end those measures was to end the activity that those measures were designed to counter," according to the news agency. \(return to top\) Yonhap News ("BUSH SUPPORTS N.K. NUCLEAR TALKS BUT HOLDS FIRM ON COUNTERFEITING", 2006-01-26) reported that US President George W. Bush reaffirmed his administration's commitment Thursday to DPRK nuclear negotiations but said there is no room for compromise on stopping the nation's illicit counterfeiting. He said the two issues, nuclear armament and counterfeiting, are entirely separate, a policy administration officials have told the DPRK and other negotiating partners. \(return to top\)

2. Inter-Korean Unification Festival

Yonhap News ("N. KOREA PROPOSES HOLDING JOINT FESTIVAL WITH SOUTH ", 2006-01-26) reported that the DPRK proposed that the two Koreas hold a national unification festival to mark the sixth anniversary of the landmark June 15 summit between their leaders in 2000, the DPRK's official media said. Yang Hyong-sop, vice-president of the presidium of the North's Supreme People's Assembly, made the overture during a meeting on policy, reported the (North) Korean Central Broadcasting Station.

3. UNICEF Humanitarian Action Report 2006 on DPRK

The Korea Times ("EFFECTS OF NK ECONOMIC REFORM HARD TO DETECT' ", 2006-01-25) reported that the DPRK's economic reform steps have generated economic activities, but the degree of implementation and impact is not that visible, according to a UN humanitarian report. The country's weak managerial capacity is also limiting aid project implementation, the report said. The UNICEF Humanitarian Action Report 2006, dated Monday, asks the international community to donate $583.48 million to fund UNICEF's actions for the year, including $11.2 million for the DPRK.

4. DPRK Defectors

The Korea Times ("67% OF DEFECTORS FACE DISCRIMINATION", 2006-01-26) reported that more than 67 percent of DPRK defectors say they have suffered workplace discrimination the ROK, according to a report of the human rights panel. The National Human Rights Commission yesterday released a survey showing that 67.6 percent of 500 DPRK defectors said they are discriminated against at work.

5. DPRK Industry

The Korea Times ("NORTH LAGS SOUTH BY 35 YEARS", 2006-01-25) reported that the DPRK lags behind the ROK by 35 years in terms of industrial development, a state-run bank said Wednesday. A book published by the Korea Development Bank said most of the DPRK's industries are shown to remain at a level not seen in the ROK since the late 1960s. The industrial gap is most conspicuous in the electricity, shipbuilding and textile sectors, the book said, followed by the fields of steel-making, auto-manufacturing, machinery and electronics.

6. DPRK Burial Ban

Donga Ilbo ("NORTH KOREANS CIRCUMVENTING BURIAL BAN ", 2006-01-26) reported that last year, Cheong-jin authorities banned burials and announced a directive calling for the cremation of dead bodies because there were too many graveyards and too few trees. A similar rule took effect in Pyongyang in 2004. It costs 90,000 DPRK won (about 30 dollars) for one cremation. Older citizens have become frustrated. "This is the wrong time to die," one senior citizen said. "My son, I want to be buried underground." There are solutions to this dilemma, however. Cremation is compulsory only in large cities. One can rent a car to move dead bodies and bury them in rural areas. However, it costs over 100,000 won to move a body the distance between Seoul and Suwon. The average wage of a worker is 2,000-3,000 won. It is also difficult to pay a visit to one's ancestors' graves this way. It is also possible to bury dead bodies near the mountains by bribing forest conservancy officials. The only choice left is a secret burial at night.

8. US on Tensions with ROK

Chosun Ilbo ("WASHINGTON GLOSSES OVER N.KOREA SPAT WITH SEOUL ", 2006-01-26) reported that the US downplayed a warning by ROK President Roh Moo-hyun that attempts from Washington to topple the DPRK regime would result in "friction" with Seoul. "Hadn't seen those comments," State Department spokesman Sean McCormack told reporters. "There was no such word as 'friction' in the translated version that we have and there's no need for further comment," another spokesman later told the Chosun Ilbo on the phone.
