Threatening Gestures as Cries for Help?

The NAPSNet Policy Forum provides expert analysis of contemporary peace and security issues in Northeast Asia. As always, we invite your responses to this report and hope you will take the opportunity to participate in discussion of the analysis.

Recommended Citation

in the South at least, one can clearly discern such traces of emotionality. In the South, one finds similar traces of emotionality, but the emotional expressions are more restrained and controlled. The South is characterized by a high degree of control, both in the family and in the workplace. This is in contrast to the North, which is characterized by a high degree of control in the workplace and in the family. The North is also characterized by a high degree of control in the political sphere, with little opposition to the rotating dictatorships in the South. The South is characterized by a high degree of control in the economic sphere, with little opposition to the rotating dictatorships in the South.

North Korea is on the way to greater openness, a development that is evident in the increased number of tourists and foreign visitors. This is in contrast to the South, which is characterized by a high degree of control in the political sphere. The North is also characterized by a high degree of control in the economic sphere, with little opposition to the rotating dictatorships in the South. The South is characterized by a high degree of control in the economic sphere, with little opposition to the rotating dictatorships in the South.

North Korea is a country that finds itself in the midst of a crisis, and a process of transformation is underway. The transformation is characterized by a shift from a command economy to a market economy, with the aim of increasing economic growth and improving the standard of living. The transformation is also characterized by a shift from a closed society to an open society, with the aim of increasing political freedom and improving human rights.

The Korean peninsula has always been of great geo-strategic importance, and it is still a matter of concern for the international community. The peninsula is characterized by a high degree of control in the political sphere, with little opposition to the rotating dictatorships in the South. The South is characterized by a high degree of control in the economic sphere, with little opposition to the rotating dictatorships in the South. The North is characterized by a high degree of control in the economic sphere, with little opposition to the rotating dictatorships in the South. The South is characterized by a high degree of control in the economic sphere, with little opposition to the rotating dictatorships in the South.