6. DPRK Missile Sales

DPRK leader Kim Jong-il admitted that his country has been selling missiles to Iran and Syria to earn foreign currency, and that he was not serious when he told Russian President Vladimir Putin about a possible deal to stop his country's missile development. Los Angeles Times published an editorial that said that Kim's dismissal of the offer deepened the uncertainties over how committed he is to pursuing detente. The Asian Wall Street Journal published an article that argued that the statement proved Kim to be as unreliable as he was thought of in the past.

1. Kashmir

The Hizbul Mujahideen withdrew its offer of a unilateral ceasefire and accused India of not responding positively to a demand for trilateral peace talks, but denied it had received any pressure from Pakistan to do so. Hizbul supreme commander Syed Salahuddin called for Pakistani troops to enter the Kashmir region. Editorials laid blame for the breakdown differentially on India, Pakistan, and militant groups, but argued that despite its being withdrawn, the ceasefire offer opened the way for dialogue.
