1. DPRK Missile Development

Russian President Vladimir V. Putin, following two rounds of talks with DPRK leader Kim Jong-il, announced on July 19 that the DPRK had offered to abandon its missile program if other nations provide it with rocket boosters for space exploration. Russia and the DPRK also signed a friendship treaty. A senior US official said that the US could not agree to the offer if it meant putting Western missile technology in the DPRK's hands. US House of Representative Benjamin Gilman, chairman of the House Committee on International Relations, introduced legislation to re-impose economic sanctions on the DPRK if it "tests or proliferates missiles or missile technology."

3. ROK-DPRK Visits

The presidents of 45 major ROK news organizations are expected to visit the DPRK from August 5-12 to travel to Mount Paektu and meet Chairman Kim Jong-il.

"ROK Journalists' Visit to DPRK" (Daily Report, July 20, ROK) ROK officials said on July 16 that more than 118 ROK citizens have tracked down their DPRK kin to confirm whether relatives in the DPRK have applied for mid-August reunions. In contrast to the ROK method of randomly selecting candidates for reunions, the DPRK seemed to have picked its candidates on the basis of their social standing and ideology judging by the prominent status of many of the candidates.

China

8. Cross-Straits Relations

The Democratic Progressive Party (DPP) on July 15 withdrew a motion to drop the pro-independence clause from its platform. Taiwan President Chen Shui-bian said that there was no room to offer more after saying he was willing to discuss the "one China" concept with the PRC and that the ball was now in the PRC's court. He also called for a deterrent force to check any military invasion by the PRC. Li Yafei, PRC secretary-general of the Association for Relations Across the Taiwan Straits (ARATS), told a delegation from Taiwan's Kuomintang Party that there was no consensus that Taiwan and the PRC could have different interpretations of the one-China principle.
