RUSSIA’S NONPROLIFERATION POLICY AND THE SITUATION IN EAST ASIA

Recommended Citation

Russia's Nonproliferation Policy and the Situation in East Asia

Valentin G. Orlov

Institute for the Economic Development of the Far East

Narodin Institute

ABSTRACT

Russia's nonproliferation commitment remains unaltered and WTO nonproliferation standards are in force. In domestic politics, the current pre-election conditions (threats coming from Chechnya and other southern neighbors) may influence the position of the Kremlin on this issue. Moscow's foreign policy has not undergone any changes. The new military doctrine and the new steppe reach agreements with the US, South Korea, Japan, and US Korea. The North Korean nuclear crisis proved to be a major diplomatic challenge. In East Asia, US and Russia are trying to limit the proliferation of WMDs. The US is trying to promote its own WMD nonproliferation policy.

RUSSIA'S NONPROLIFERATION POLICY AND NATIONAL INTERESTS

In the early 1990s, the end of the Cold War has led to new approaches to arms control. The general understanding of the need to preserve strategic stability and its implications for the development of military technology and new weapons, including nuclear weapons, was accepted. Russia's nonproliferation commitment is based on the country's national interest. Russia's national interest is the core of the country's foreign policy. The most important aspect of the national interest is the security of the country's territories, its independence, and its foreign policy. The national interest is the basis for the implementation of international and interstate relations.

Russia's commitment to nonproliferation is a part of its national interest. In this context, the nonproliferation commitment is a factor of the national interest. Russia's nonproliferation commitment is based on the country's national interest. The national interest is the basis for the implementation of international and interstate relations. Russia's nonproliferation commitment is a factor of the national interest.

The national interest is the core of the country's foreign policy. The most important aspect of the national interest is the security of the country's territories, its independence, and its foreign policy. The national interest is the basis for the implementation of international and interstate relations. Russia's nonproliferation commitment is a factor of the national interest.

Russia's nonproliferation commitment is a part of its national interest. In this context, the nonproliferation commitment is a factor of the national interest. Russia's nonproliferation commitment is based on the country's national interest. The national interest is the basis for the implementation of international and interstate relations. Russia's nonproliferation commitment is a factor of the national interest.

Russia's nonproliferation commitment is a part of its national interest. In this context, the nonproliferation commitment is a factor of the national interest. Russia's nonproliferation commitment is based on the country's national interest. The national interest is the basis for the implementation of international and interstate relations. Russia's nonproliferation commitment is a factor of the national interest.

Russia's nonproliferation commitment is a part of its national interest. In this context, the nonproliferation commitment is a factor of the national interest. Russia's nonproliferation commitment is based on the country's national interest. The national interest is the basis for the implementation of international and interstate relations. Russia's nonproliferation commitment is a factor of the national interest.

Russia's nonproliferation commitment is a part of its national interest. In this context, the nonproliferation commitment is a factor of the national interest. Russia's nonproliferation commitment is based on the country's national interest. The national interest is the basis for the implementation of international and interstate relations. Russia's nonproliferation commitment is a factor of the national interest.