Afghanistan War and Implications

1. Afghanistan: Current Situation

Following the capture of Kabul, the Northern Alliance's foreign minister Abdullah Abdullah has invited Afghan groups for negotiations on the future of the country. There have been unconfirmed reports of violence and killing in Mazar-e-Sharif and Kabul. Meanwhile, the fate of the southern city of Kandahar, the birthplace of Taliban leader Mullah Omar, remains uncertain.

"Fate of Kandahar unclear"

In the wake of the Taliban's retreat, a former mujahideen group led by Maulvi Yunus Khalis took control of the eastern city of Jalalabad. There have also been reports of tensions among various Northern Alliance groups in Mazar-e-Sharif.

"Factional fights break out in Mazar-i-Sharif"

In an interview with the British Broadcasting Corporation's Pashto Service, the supreme commander of the Taliban Mullah Mohammad Omar claimed that his real goal is "the extinction of America." Meanwhile, a former Pastun Mujahideen, and the leader of Hizb-i-Islami Afghanistan, Gulbaddin Hekmatyar has announced his support of the Taliban.

"Mujahideen take up the Taliban fight"

Pakistani government has denied a report broadcasted on Mashed based Iranian radio claiming that Mullah Omar and Osama bin Laden have crossed into Pakistan.

2. Afghanistan: Future Prospects

Afghanistan's victorious Northern Alliance forces have come under strong international pressure to seek a broad-based interim government. Pakistan, Iran and the United States have also reiterated their support for a broad based and multi-ethnic setup in Kabul.

Roedad Khan, a retired senior member of Pakistani bureaucracy, takes a critical look at Pakistan's foreign policy.

5. India

Indian Prime Minister, Atal Behari Vajpayee has applauded the victories of the Northern Alliance over the Taliban. He advocated a "generous assistance to our brethren in Afghanistan."

6. General Assessments

In his column for the Pakistan daily, The News, Imtiaz Alam examines the strategic and tactical "blunders" committed by the Taliban.

M.A. Niazi, a Pakistani journalist and political commentator, has argued that the "Taliban have not just shifted gear from the conventional to the guerrilla mode of warfare, but have also shifted to guerrilla rather than state politics..."

Writing for the Far Eastern Economic Review, journalist and author, Ahmad Rashid argues that the Taliban's retreat from northern Afghanistan has set the stage for new military battles while accelerating the "challenge of finding a legitimate leadership in a country where war is a way of life."

Malaysian Prime Minister Mahathir Mohammad has stated the war against terrorism is "beginning to look more and more like a war against Muslims."

Pakistan

1. Pakistan: Domestic Situation

Pakistani law enforcements agencies have been put on high alert to track down "as many as 96 most wanted sectarian terrorists" who have been hiding in Afghanistan, and may try to "enter Pakistan in the disguise of Afghan refugees."

Chairman Pakhtoonkhwa Milli Awami Party (PMAP) Mehmood Khan Achakzai has called for greater autonomy for the four Pakistani provinces.

Pakistani businessmen have expressed fear that the country will continue to face uncertain economic conditions until the situation in Afghanistan is stabilized.

In his column for the Pakistani daily, Dawn, Ayaz Amir has suggested that Pakistan citizens may now have "a chance to cure the Pakistani state of its delusions of persecution and grandeur. The world is not out to get us (persecution). Nor are we a fortress of Islam destined to fulfill messianic dreams (grandeur).

In his article for The News, Pakistan, Kamran Khan discusses Pakistan's security concerns after the fall of the Taliban government.

The Supreme Court of Pakistan dismissed the chief of Jamaat-i-Islami, Qazi Hussain Ahmad's petition challenging a local court order that restricted his movement within the country.
